For the last month of this rollercoaster of a year, we've put together a selection of some thoughtful shows currently open across Los Angeles. If you don't feel comfortable visiting spaces in-person, most of these are also available to view online — and it's worth seeing the images.

Cosmo Whyte: When They Aren't Looking We Gather By The River

In Cosmo Whyte's stirring, first solo exhibition with the gallery, he makes connections between contemporary Black Lives Matter protests, Black Civil Rights movements in the 1960s, and African-Caribbean protests in 1980s London. The Jamaican-born artist builds a complex, moving portrait of the Black diaspora in charcoal and gouache drawings, as well as one stunning hand-painted beaded curtain based on a 1964 photo of Black activists swimming on a segregated beach. To see the show, viewers must pass through this curtain.
